A Christian advocacy initiative aims to train 100,000 evangelical ambassadors focused on defending Israel's international image and brand. Participants position themselves as ideologically neutral, unified around support for Israel.

SAŽETAK

This talk describes a large-scale training program designed to mobilize evangelical Christian ambassadors to advocate for Israel on the global stage. The speaker outlines an initiative targeting the development of 100,000 Christian advocates whose primary mission is to defend and promote Israel's brand and international reputation. Participants are characterized as operating outside traditional left-right political divisions, instead coalescing around a singular focus: support for Israel. The program frames this advocacy work using figurative language, referring to Israel metaphorically as 'the bird.' The initiative represents an organized effort to coordinate evangelical Christian messaging and activism in support of Israeli interests.
